History of Popes

#211 – Paul II - Pope from Aug. 30, 1464 – death, July 26, 1471. Pietro Barbo, the nephew of Pope Eugene IV, was born in Venice in 1417. Pietro sought a career in the Church following his uncle's election in 1431. The kind and generous, yet ambitious, young Pietro was named a cardinal after nine years and served each of his papal predecessors until his own election in 1464. Prior to his election, he swore to uphold a "capitulation" that basically gave extra powers to the College of Cardinals and encroached on the pope's legitimate office. He abandoned the agreement as soon as he was made pontiff and suffered a tense relationship with his cardinals as a result. He is best known for having a relatively uneventful papacy. The closest he came to intrigue was closing the Roman Academy, a prominent school that had become overrun by pagan influences and severe moral degradation, in 1468. Though the move itself was prudent, it made him the target of a "biography" full of calumny & slander, written by one of the Academy's members. Contrary to current popular opinion of the Renaissance Church being opposed to lay literacy, it was Pope Paul II, nearly 100 years prior to the Protestant Reformation, who allowed printing to be introduced in the Papal States. He was partial to the extravagance that his office allowed, taking full advantage of all the liturgical garb & festivity, but also was quick to organize relief work among Rome's poor. He fought against heresy in France and Germany to some success before he died suddenly of a heart attack on July 26, 1471. What else was going on in the world at the time? A wedding that would change the world occurred in Spain on October 19, 1469, when Ferdinand II of Aragon married Isabella I of Castile. The marriage was the precursor to the creation of the Kingdom of Spain & other developments in Western Europe, the most notable of which was commissioning Christopher Columbus' voyage in 1492.

STEWARDSHIP THOUGHTS

In the Gospel, the disciples ask Jesus, "Then who can be saved?" The answer Jesus gives is one that we need to internalize & never forget: "For human beings it is impossible, but not for God. All things are possible for God." These few words hold power, hope, joy and confidence for us. It is not hard for the human ego to become inflated and we begin to think we can do anything and need no one & that is exactly when we get into trouble. When we don't think we need God, that's exactly when we need God. Let us pray for greater humility and come before the Lord at Mass to receive the great gift of the Eucharist in wonder and awe, on our knees in thanksgiving and with gratitude.

STEWARDSHIP OPPORTUNITIES

Thank you on behalf of those in need.
